Disciplined Thinkers. Ethical Leaders.

Dear Friends,

Spring is my favorite time of the year. While I am grateful that I live in a part of the country where we experience four seasons, each spring brings an experience of new life that I thoroughly enjoy. Buds swelling on the trees, the greening of the lawns and the blooms of the crocus all are nature's lesson on the cycle and rhythm of life. The liturgical seasons of the church are in harmony with the earth. The celebration of Christ's passion and death gives way to joyous alleluias as once again we rejoice in God's love and mercy. Truly spring is a special time of the year.

The Thomas More College campus exudes the energy and excitement of spring. Students and faculty returned from their break ready to bring the 2006-2007 academic year to completion. This has been a great year filled with numerous accomplishments. Our students are excelling both in and outside the classroom. They are engaged, committed and concerned young men and women who are becoming the future "disciplined thinkers and ethical leaders" for our community. Our faculty continues to be recognized as specialists in their respective fields. This is apparent in the numerous requests they receive to be presenters at professional conferences both in this country and internationally.

Commencement activities are scheduled for May 12. On that day we will present associate, bachelor and master degrees to over 300 men and women. These graduates have followed varied paths to arrive at this point in their lives. Yet, whether traditional or adult students, we are confident that as they leave the campus they will do so with superior knowledge, ethical concern and a sense of social responsibility. As our mission states they will be prepared to take "their place in the world."

Our good-byes and wishes for the future will still be echoing in the halls when we begin to finalize our plans to welcome the Class of 2011 in August. The seasons of this campus, like the seasons of the year, continue to infuse us with new life.

I wish each of you a life always challenged and blessed with "new seasons."

Sincerely,

Sr. Margaret Stallmeyer, C.D.P. '68

Saints Win Presidents' Athletic Conference

On Saturday, February 24, the Thomas More women's basketball team won the Presidents' Athletic Conference (PAC) championship, beating Westminster, 59-50, at the Connor Convocation Center. The win also set a new school record with 22 wins, earning them a spot in the NCAA Division III national tournament. Winter Wonderland

On December 5, 2006, Thomas More College hosted 200 children and 50 adults at the annual Winter Wonderland event held in the Holbrook Student Center. Participants made holiday crafts, played games, enjoyed story-telling, had a holiday dinner and spent time with Santa Claus. The Winter Wonderland event was designed to provide an enjoyable evening for children that might otherwise have a challenging holiday season. The event was sponsored by the Student Government Association with the help of the College's clubs, organizations and Student Life Office.

Overnight Open House On February 20-21, Thomas More hosted 27 accepted students who will be attending Thomas More College in the fall for an overnight orientation. The students were matched up with current Thomas More students. They attended a "Fat Tuesday Late Night Breakfast," a talent show, and had the chance to stay in the residence hall and experience life as a college student. The next day the students sat in on two classes of their choice, including Spanish, Chemistry, Biology and History.

While the February snow and ice storms in Greater Cincinnati wreaked havoc on the roads, it created a beautiful winter scene on campus.

Enrollment News

By: Angela Griffin-Jones Vice President for Enrollment Management Spring has arrived in Northern Kentucky and the Enrollment and Financial Aid Offices are hard at work reviewing applications and awarding aid to new students. Our new initiative, the "Parochial Promise," which guarantees a minimum of $10,000 institutional aid to parochial school graduates, has created quite a buzz in the Greater Cincinnati area and beyond. Our enrollment applications have increased, as well as the number of students we have accepted, and the academic quality of those students applying to Thomas More continues to rise.

The spring semester brings a variety of on-campus programs to the Admissions Office for prospective and accepted students. On Feb. 20-21 we hosted our annual Overnight Program for accepted students. On April 27th we will hold our Spring Fling Open House for high school juniors and seniors. If you are interested in getting involved with recruitment activities, please contact Billy Sarge '04 in the Enrollment Office at (859)344-3402 or email billy.sarge@thomasmore.edu.

Time Still Remains to Make a 2007 Charitable IRA Donation to Thomas More College

The Pension Protection Act (H.R.4), allows taxpayers over 70.5 years of age to donate money to charity directly from their IRA account. The best news is that a transfer of this type counts toward the required minimum distributions at age 70.5. A taxpayer is allowed to donate up to $100,000 per year from an IRA. Since the distribution will not be included in taxable income, individuals will not be able to claim a tax deduction for the charitable contribution. This provision will be effective for the years 2006 and 2007 only. Please contact the Office of Institutional Advancement at 859-344-3344 for additional information.

2007 Hillenmeyer Lecture

On Wednesday, March 21, Thomas More College hosted the 2007 Hillenmeyer Lecture, featuring Reverend Raymond J. Webb, S.T.L, Ph.D., professor of Pastoral Life and Academic Dean of the University of Saint Mary of the Lake/Mundelein Seminary in Mundelein, Illinois. Father Webb spoke on "Catholic Identity: Theology, Practical Theology and the Catholic College."

The Monsignor H.F. Hillenmeyer Distinguished Lecture Series began in 1975 in honor of Monsignor Herbert F. Hillenmeyer. A native Kentuckian and priest for 72 years, Msgr. Hillenmeyer served as the pastor of St. Thomas Church, Ft. Thomas, Kentucky from 1925 until 1968. Msgr. Hillenmeyer's zeal as a priest was matched by a deep and probing concern for Catholic education. His interest and devotion to Thomas More College was evidenced by his encouragement and support throughout the years of his priesthood. The lecture is made possible by an endowment fund established by the Hillenmeyer family in 1972.

Endowments Shape Thomas More College

When Villa Madonna College was established in the summer of 1921, the endowment was not much of a concern. As the College grew from a fragmented urban downtown Covington campus to a 100-acre suburban campus in Crestview Hills, the need for strategic planning for the future became increasingly evident.

From 1958 to 1967, enrollment increased dramatically to 1,838 students, the highest student enrollment in College history. The enrollment boom created the need for more programs, faculty and facilities. In the early 1970's, the administration, under president Dr. Richard DeGraff, determined that funding scholarships through endowments should be the College's highest funding priority.

On May 30, 1979, Thomas More received a $1 million grant from the James Graham Brown Foundation in Louisville, Kentucky for endowed scholarships. The College responded by successfully raising $2 million to meet the Brown Foundation challenge. The money raised toward the challenge came from Northern Kentucky and Greater Cincinnati individuals and major corporations. This marked the first endowed scholarship fund to be established at Thomas More College, and solidified the College's focus on strategic development planning which thrives today.

Gifts to the endowment have made it possible to plan for the future of Thomas More College and to provide further opportunities for our present and future generation of students. Currently, Thomas More has 80 individual endowments that total almost $12 million, ranging from $25,000 to $1 million. By industry standards, the formula to determine a college's or university's minimum endowment is three times its operating budget. For Thomas More that would mean an endowment of $75 million. Reaching this target endowment would protect and preserve the College's fiscal health for future generations of students, and would provide a permanent source of revenue for endowed scholarships.

An investment in Thomas More's endowment is a permanent investment in the future of the College, as well as the future of Catholic higher education. Endowed funds create a foundation for fiscal growth and stability, while generating a reliable portion of income for scholarships, professorships and programs.

In December 2006, Thomas More was awarded $250,000 from the James Graham Brown Foundation to be added to the endowed James Graham Brown Scholarship Program. With this endowment gift came a challenge to the College to raise an additional $1 million, which the Brown Foundation agreed to match up to the amount of $500,000. Monies collected from this 2/1 challenge will be placed in the College's general scholarship endowment. There is no better time than now to double the impact of an endowment gift to Thomas More College.

If you would like to contribute to one of our existing funds, or if you are interested in receiving more information on how to establish an endowment, please contact the Office of Institutional Advancement at 859-344-3344 or e-mail advancement@thomasmore.edu.

WHY I GIVE TO TMC

"My gifts to Thomas More through the years have been a way of giving back to a place I hold near and dear. My four years at TMC were some of the greatest years of my life, and I can only hope that my gifts offer future student-athletes the same experience, or better."

"Because I was a member of the football team, I feel a great amount of loyalty to the athletic department. Some of my best college memories were on the football field. I encourage all alumni to reflect on their experiences at Thomas More and make it a point to give back what you can. No gift is too small."

Living What You Believe

Reception and restaurant at hotel in Arba Minch, Ethiopia, near the Great Rift Valley. Sherwood conducted a research trial there and in Gondar in the arid north of Ethiopia.

Since 1998, Jim Sherwood '81 has traveled all over the world. He has lived in Asia and Africa and worked in 22 countries throughout Europe, Africa and Asia. He is currently living and working in Johannesburg, South Africa as an independent clinical research consultant. His current client is Kendle International, a Cincinnati based company, for whom he is championing a program to develop new clinical research sites throughout southern Africa.

Jim's life hasn't always been so exotic. He grew up in the small town of Augusta, Kentucky in what could be described as "humble beginnings." Augusta is unusual for a small, rural town in that it has a large Catholic population.

"I took instruction from our parish priest, Father Lou Brinker, who is a big fan of Thomas More College. He was instrumental in influencing my decision to go to Thomas More and in introducing me to my mentor, Sister Mary Laurence. I had an interest in science from a very young age, particularly the biological sciences; however, my high school did not offer courses in biology. When I came to Thomas More it was only natural to pursue this field." A decision he has never regretted.

"All of my biology professors at Thomas More; Dr. Humphreys, Dr. Bill Bryant, Dr. John Ferner, Mr. Volker and Sister Mary Laurence, were instrumental in my professional development." said Jim. "Sister Mary Laurence, however, taught me (and is still teaching me) so much more than biology. I battled with the decision to apply to medical or graduate school and she counseled me, telling me that I didn't necessarily need an M.D. or Ph.D. to contribute to society, do well and succeed. But more than that, she's been a model for living what you believe. She leads by example and has more compassion, tolerance, acceptance and understanding than anyone else I've ever met."

While at Thomas More, Jim worked as a respiratory therapist, first at St. Elizabeth Medical Center in Covington and then at the Jewish Hospital in Cincinnati. After graduation, he moonlighted as a respiratory therapist for the James N. Gamble Institute of Medical Research, located at The Christ Hospital at the time, working on a clinical trial of an aerosolized drug for influenza. When the project was complete, Gamble offered him a job as a research assistant. He took the job and ended up working for Gamble (which later became The Gamble Program in Clinical Research at Cincinnati Children's Hospital Medical Center) for 14 years in various capacities culminating with an appointment as assistant professor of pediatrics.

"My entire career has been in clinical trials, coordinating and conducting them when I was at Gamble, and later in monitoring and managing them. Clinical trials are heavily regulated (as they should be) and the framework for administering them is substantial. I've focused my work in the field of infectious diseases. I grew up when AIDS was emerging in the 1980's and it made a huge impact on my life. The Gamble Institute was, and still is, all about infectious diseases, which helped refine my interest."

In 1998, Jim left Gamble to accept a position as a senior clinical research associate with Pharmaceutical Product Development, Inc. (PPD) in Wilmington, North Carolina. He packed up his house in Ludlow, Kentucky and moved to the coast. He had only been living there about three months when his boss at the time pulled him aside and said "Jim, I have a deal for you..." She asked him if he would like to go to Thailand for six months to monitor a trial they were conducting there for cryptococcal meningitis.

While in Thailand Jim helped set up a replication of a cholera study he had coordinated at Gamble, and one of the gastroenterology professors he worked with in Cincinnati, Ohio came over to assist him. "We were having dinner one evening and having the 'I can't believe I'm here' talk when I said to him 'My life/career is the result of serendipity; I seem to have a knack for being in the right place at the right time." His friend's response was, "Jim, don't sell yourself short, each time you knew you were in the right place at the right time and you took advantage of it." Jim recently shared this story with Dr. Bill Bryant's vertebrate biology class at Thomas More when he was home this past January, "I think it's a message that can benefit many people."

Six months in Thailand turned into nearly two years. At the end of the project the Thai office had moved to the province of PPD's European operating arm. The vice president at the time (a microbiologist from Toledo, Ohio) was pleased with Jim's work and asked him to go down to the South African office for a few weeks to sort out a study that wasn't going well. That was nearly eight years ago.

Jim served as the project manager for PPD's contract with the National Institute for Health's (NIH) Division of AIDS, in charge of overseeing the monitoring of NIH/DAIDS sponsored clinical trials outside the Americas. While in this position, he became heavily involved with training. He traveled to clinical research sites in 11 countries in southern and central Africa alone, as well as throughout Europe and Asia. "Working heavily in the developing world has given me an appreciation and passion for the other (other than HIV) big 'killers' — malaria and tuberculosis."

Jim worked for PPD for seven years in South Africa and beyond before he decided it was time to do something different — hang out his own shingle and become an independent contractor. Kendle International was just opening an office in Johannesburg at this time, and their new director was someone Jim had worked with at PPD. "She offered me a contract for 30 hours a week for two years and I jumped at the chance," said Jim.

"I think my passion for training helped give rise to my current interest in site development. Drug and vaccine development proceeds in phases through human testing. The last phase before submission of a licensing application to the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) is phase III, and these trials involve (usually) thousands of subjects. There are quite a few exciting compounds/products that are approaching this stage of development in HIV, malaria and other diseases. The logical and ethical place to conduct these trials is in the developing world. At the moment, there just aren't enough trained capable research sites to meet the expected demand. In helping to establish and train new sites we can help empower people, both economically and socially, in some of the poorest countries in the world."

Jim relishes all of his travels but feels most at home in South Africa. "I enjoyed living in Thailand and might have even entertained some thoughts of settling down there, but it was nothing compared to what I feel about South Africa. There are so many similarities between South Africa and the United States in terms of geography, culture and history. This truly is my home now." The United States and South Africa allow an individual to hold dual citizenship. While Jim states he will always be an American, he hopes to become a bona fide South African citizen soon.

Most of Jim's travels these days are within Africa. "I'm on my third set of extra pages in my passport, so you never know!" Next stop..."I would like to visit New Zealand and Australia to scuba dive the Great Barrier Reef."

Partnership Pioneers New Winter Session

By: Nathan Hartman and Jack Rudnick, Jr.

In response to the student community's request to continue the accelerated momentum of their academic pursuits, the Office of Lifelong Learning, in partnership with the Department of Business Administration, provided students with an opportunity to move more quickly toward earning their degree through a new winter course offering. The Department of Business Administration faculty member, Jack Rudnick, Jr. launched Thomas More College's first Winter Session — Principles of U.S. Healthcare Management. The course was held December 15 through January 15.

"Courses like these keep us competitive with other institutions through alternative course offerings. It also allows students the opportunity to fulfill hours in what has traditionally been thought of as a break for students," said Nathan Hartman, Director of Lifelong Learning.

The course is designed to cut across traditional educational silos (isolated discipline learning) and explore healthcare from several academic discipline perspectives. "While traditional healthcare management focuses exclusively on the business aspects of operating healthcare entities, this course considers factors such as the effects of a poor social support infrastructure and the negative consequences on healthcare status," said Rudnick. "Poor housing, education and lack of community involvement in the economic development of communities adversely affects a community's health. The cycle eventually leads to diminished individual health status and an increased cost to taxpayers." One student said about the course, "Not knowing anything about healthcare, this class made me want to volunteer."

The course centers on the infrastructure of healthcare in the United States. A unique feature of the program is a focus on corporate social responsibility, the definition of service learning, and the opportunity to learn more about these concepts and their application. The course includes a site visit to a healthcare entity. The 17 students in the course visited Holy Family Home in Melbourne, Kentucky, a unique self-funded long-term care healthcare center for healthy aging. Many students were interested in learning more about the healthcare service industry and its application to the businesses the students help manage. The application of healthcare services to their lives as personal citizens moved them to sacrifice the holidays for learning. "This class provided a realistic side of healthcare. It examined issues in healthcare that many people are not aware of," said another student of the course.

"Several courses in the Department of Business are supplemented with learning tools made possible with technology," said Dr. Larry Byerly, Chair of the Department of Business Administration. "Elective coursework has been added to the array of the Department of Business electives to include the expectations, considerations and requirements for leadership and management using virtual teams in a global environment."

Education Students Promote Reading

On April 13, The Education Club and members of the education international honor society of Kappa Delta Pi, held an afternoon of reading as part of Reading is Fun. This year, in support of Catholic education, the Thomas More students visited St. Anthony's Elementary School in Covington, Kentucky. St. Anthony's principal, Mr. Michael Jacks, is a 1982 graduate of Thomas More College. The Thomas More students planned an afternoon of lessons, which they taught to third through sixth graders, as a way of showing support for reading and continuing the Thomas More tradition of getting children actively involved in the reading process.

The Center for Ohio River Research & Education at the Biology Field Station Update

The Center for Ohio River Research & Education, established in 1998, is a private, non-profit entity owned and operated by Thomas More College, and is a part of the Thomas More College Biology Field Station. The staff at the Center offer visitors an opportunity to enhance their knowledge of the natural world through field courses, research projects, and outreach programs which focus on the ecology of the Ohio River. If you or your group are interested in visiting the Field Station, contact Dr. Chris Lorentz, Associate Professor of Biology at 859-344-3373 or chris.lorentz@thomasmore.edu.

For the upcoming summer, the following projects are planned for faculty, students and visitors at the Center for Ohio River Research & Education:

 This spring, the Center will partner again with the Newport Aquarium to host grade school field trips at the Biology Field Station, which complement trips made to the

- Aquarium. Over 500 grade school students are expected to visit the Field Station this spring for interactive, handson science lessons offered by education and biology students.
- Dr. Chris Lorentz, Thomas More College, and Dr. Yvonne Meichtry, Northern Kentucky University, are partnering to offer a graduate course in Aquatic Ecology for teachers. The course will be held at the Field Station and can be taken for graduate credit in Education or Biology.
- For the Duke Corporation, Thomas More students and Dr. Chris Lorentz plan to continue their long-term monitoring of the Ohio River around the Zimmer Power Plant. Studies will include water chemistry analyses and fish and mussel collections.
- The staff at the Center, along with the Hamilton County Park District, will conduct a summer electrofishing survey of four recently-acquired lakes at Campbell Lakes Preserve, near Harrison, Ohio.
- The Center's researchers will conduct a stream assessment of Simpson Creek in Deerfield Township, Ohio and partner with the Sanitation District to assess three streams in Campbell County.
 Primary activities will include fish and macroinvertebrate collections and water chemistry sampling.

 The United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) renewed its internship program with the Center to employ Thomas More students to conduct research in the area of biosensor technology and the evaluation of aquatic biomonitors for source water protection.

• From July 15 through July 20, the Center will offer its third annual Summer Science Institute, a week-long enrichment program for high school students from Kentucky and Ohio. The Institute includes a challenging science curriculum and hands-on activities in aquatic biology, astronomy and physics at the Thomas More College Biology Field Station and Observatory. Participants will spend the week on campus in Murphy Hall and will study throughout the area, including the Licking River, Ohio River and Newport Aquarium.

Outdoor Adventurers Club Attends Conference

On January 19 through 21, 2007, members of the Outdoor Adventurers Club (OAC) at Thomas More attended the Sierra Club's Activist Weekend conference at the Kentucky Leadership Center on Lake Cumberland. Attendees included Environmental Science major: Livvi Lantry, Biology majors: Emily Anneken, Jon Burns, Andrew Farwick and Brandon Kohrs, Psychology major: Emily Eisman, Nursing major: Kevin Keller and Exercise Science major: Henry Ehresman. The weekend was filled with lectures, panel speakers, a film festival and several outdoor events, including a caving trip partially organized by OAC member, Andrew Farwick. All students participated in a session on "Building Partnerships" with students in support of environmental issues. The students from Thomas More interacted with other students from Centre College, Murray State, Northern Kentucky University and the University of Kentucky.

For information regarding the Outdoor Adventurers Club and its upcoming events including a ski trip, a cave trip, an Earth Day celebration and a rafting trip to the New River, contact club president Livvi Lantry (oliva.lantry@thomasmore.edu) or Club Advisor, Dr. Chris Lorentz (chris.lorentz@thomasmore.edu).

Teacher Leadership Class 2007

Thomas More professors and alumni took part in the 2007 Teacher Leadership Northern Kentucky Class. Thomas More professors Dr. Raymond Hebert, professor of History, and Dr. Elizabeth Penn, professor of Education, as well as alumnus Mr. Brian Robinson '97, serve on the Steering Committee. Thomas More Professor of Biology, Dr. K. Siobhan Barone and alumnus Mr. Chuck Keller, '80 are graduates of the 2007 class.

Teacher Leadership Northern Kentucky (TLNK) is sponsored by the Northern Kentucky Chamber of Commerce. It is an opportunity for outstanding P-16 teachers to learn about a variety of issues in the region: economic development, health and human services, arts and culture, diversity, the justice system and the legislature. The goal of TLNK is to develop leadership skills in teachers, and to encourage them to use these skills for the betterment of the broader community.

Teachers are chosen by their superintendents to participate. During the course of the leadership class, participants go to Camp Joy to sharpen their leadership skills and practice teamwork. They meet with Kentucky legislators on Government Day in Frankfort, Kentucky and dialogue with business leaders throughout the program. They are invited to "ride along" with a police officer to prepare for Justice Day, as well as shadow board members to learn leadership opportunities in the community. Serving lunch at the Parish Kitchen is a highlight of the class. The class of 2007 graduated on February 24th at Thomas More College.

Thomas More Alumni Attend Education Conference in Brazil

Four alumnae of Thomas More College spent part of January at the Sisters of Notre Dame International Education Conference in Canoas, Brazil. They discussed how to apply Notre Dame educational principles to 21st century challenges.

The United States delegates included: Sr. M. Renee Nienaber '73, Director of Religious Education, St. Mary Parish; Sr. M. Evelynn Reinke '62, Associate Professor, Education, Thomas More College, and Sr. Elaine Marie Winter '73, Principal, Notre Dame Academy, from the Covington province. They met with SND educators from around the world, including members from Brazil, England, Germany, Italy, India, Indonesia, Korea, Mozambique and Tanzania/Kenya, as well as the general council from Rome.

After shared prayer, reports, and multi-lingual conversations, members left animated to carry out the conference theme: Go, wrap the world in hope. "It was thrilling to meet women from around the globe who valued so much of what I value," reflected Sr. M. Evelynn. "While the task before us is great, we were empowered by the realization that, working together, we can make a difference in the world."

Srs. Elaine Marie Winter, M. Evelynn Reinke, M. Rita Geoppinger, and M. Renee Nienaber enjoy a break from the conference.

FACULTY Profile

Ten Minutes with Alana Ghent

How long have you worked at TMC?

A: Since August, 1994.

What are your hobbies?

A: Yoga, pottery, gardening, reading and hiking.

What are you passionate about?

A: Learning about being human — what possibilities, responsibilities that offers us.

What are your most recent accomplishments/appointments?

A: I've recently been elected president of the Kentucky Theatre Association.

I'm also the Artistic Director for the Ovation Theatre Company in Cincinnati, Ohio.

What motivates you as a faculty member?

A: I love the moments when students take something from a theatre course or production and connect it with their larger world. I love that with their questions and fresh perspectives, my students force me to examine and reexamine my own thoughts and assumptions every day.

What do you see as your biggest challenge as an educator?

A: I think students today are exposed to so many different forms of media and technologies that they not only think differently from my generation, but their whole process of thinking is different. Staying current and finding ways to communicate and learn from each other is an ongoing challenge.

What is your favorite book?

A: Oooh, there are too many to just name one. Right now I'm reading Rusholme Road by Laurie Lanson. I just finished a memoir by Timothy Findlay, one of my favorite novelists and playwrights.

What music are you listening to right now?

I'm listening to the music for a show I'm directing. I've also been spending a lot of time in the theatre painting and dressing the set for an upcoming show, which for me always involves sing-along classic rock.

If you had to put your story in just a few sentences, what would it be?

A: I was born in London, Ontario. I was an avid storyteller and make-believer from very early on; I even directed plays at my childhood birthday parties. My mother blames herself for my love of theatre, because she took us to the Stratford and Shaw Theatre festivals every summer. I received my Bachelor of Fine Arts in Theatre at Concordia University in Montreal, Canada and my Master's of Fine Arts in Directing at the University of Mississippi. I kicked around the United States and Canada a bit before taking a teaching post at Alice Lloyd College, a work study college in Eastern Kentucky. I lived in a little log cabin on a mountainside with a ferret and my cat for three years before coming to Thomas More. When I interviewed at Thomas More, I fell in love with the area and bought my first home before I even started work. I'm still working on my little fixer-upper. It turns out I'm not nearly as handy as I thought.

What is something you've always wanted to do, but haven't had the chance to do yet?

A: Direct a collaborative theatre project involving cultural exchange.

Alana Ghent

Assistant Professor, Drama

Professional Associations:

Southeastern Theatre Association

Kentucky Theatre Association

Society of American Fight Directors

American Yoga Alliance

What is your motto or words to live by?

A: Not sure I should share it with the world at large but the mother of a good friend of mine advised us when we were young: "Find a job you love and you'll never work a day in your life". Some days still feel like a lot of work, but lots of fun, too. Another favorite: "Live in the world you want to create."

Thomas More Biology Students Perform Standout Research

Three Thomas More College biology students performed immunology research from the fall of 2005 through the fall of 2006 under the mentorship of Dr. K. Siobhan Barone, Professor of Biology. This research, performed by senior, Stephanie Horton, junior, Lindsey Jackson and junior, Meredith Wall, was supported by a National Institutes of Health grant awarded to Dr. Barone in 2004. The study investigated the mechanisms involved in oral tolerance, which is defined as an unresponsiveness of the immune system to a foreign substance induced by prior ingestion of that substance. Elucidation of the mechanisms involved in the establishment of oral tolerance may eventually lead to better treatment for autoimmune diseases such as multiple sclerosis and lupus. All three students presented their findings at local, state and national meetings.

Both Meredith Wall and Lindsey Jackson presented seminars on their research to the local community of Thomas More College in October of 2006. In addition, Lindsey Jackson presented the findings at the Kentucky Academy of Sciences (KAS) annual meeting in November of 2006. Her talk was titled "Effect of In Vivo Administration of Anti-CTLA-4 mAb and anti-IL-10 mAb on the Induction of Low Dose Oral Tolerance." On the national level, findings from this study were presented at the annual meeting at the Autumn Immunology Conference held in Chicago in November 2006. At this conference all three students had the opportunity to interact with immunologists of international acclaim. Future plans for Stephanie and Lindsey include attending medical school, while Meredith plans to perform scientific research.

Celebration Launches Literary Magazine

On April 4, Thomas More College award-winning writers and artists gathered for a festive evening of literature, art and music at the annual Words Celebration, launching the this year's publication of Words, the College's student literary magazine. This year's featured artist was Kentucky's premier Affrilachian poet, Frank X Walker.

Words has been a Thomas More publication for decades, with a circulation of over 2,000. Both the Words Celebration and the publication it honors reflect the spirit of diverse people coming together to share and experience the power of creative expression. "The event is all about changing the notion that good writing is the intellectual property of English Departments," said Sherry Cook Stanforth, Ph.D., Associate Professor of English and coordinator for the celebration. "Creative use of language is a community resource—a gift for all of us to use, appreciate and explore."

TMC Football: Where "Old School" Becomes New Again

Jim Hilvert

By: Patrick M. Eagan ('01) Adjunct Professor of European and Medieval History When asked what the word "tradition" meant to him, Jim Hilvert, the newly appointed head coach of the Thomas More football program, simply grinned and said, "Two things...hard work and honoring your alumni." Indeed, it is these traditional, "old school" principles that have become the focal point for Coach Hilvert and his new staff as they seek to return Saints football to the national stage. Chosen early in January for his first head-coaching job after seven impressive seasons as the defensive coordinator at rival Mount St. Joseph College, Coach Hilvert eagerly anticipates putting his own unique stamp on an impressively rich tradition of Thomas More College football. The program has compiled three undefeated regular seasons (1991, 1995, and 2001) and has become the second fastest Division III school to amass 100 wins.

After becoming just the fourth head coach in the program's history (founded in 1990), Hilvert (a 1989 graduate of Cincinnati's Elder High School) is quickly adapting to his new settings. Seemingly at ease behind his desk as game film rolls on the television, dry-erase boards cover the walls and expose the evidence of a tireless work ethic which Coach Hilvert is seeking to impart on his new squad. Names of former and current players, sought after recruits, and, of course, a few plays here and there quickly envelop you into the harried world of the head coach. What can be immediately recognized though are the signs of a plan; its purpose, to return the Saints football program to the national prominence enjoyed in the 1990's. "We are all excited to start a new era of football here at Thomas More," declares Athletic Director Terry Connor, "specifically because we feel that Coach Hilvert is the right person to continue building upon our successful tradition."

In his first season, Coach Hilvert will seek a suitable blend of both old and new for his program. While relishing the "exciting challenge" of revamping the recruiting and strength programs, he is quick to point out that, "There is a core of good young players here that are ready for great things!" Returning all-conference selections such as quarterback Trevor Stellman and defenders Greg Frey and Brad Steinmetz are but a few parts to the nucleus of current Saints that have been clearly motivated by the up-beat and charismatic attitude of their new leader. Spirited off-season workouts and a re-dedication to achievement in the classroom are early indicators of a refreshing convergence of new and old-school ideas in Crestview Hills. Indeed, Thomas More College President Sister Margaret Stallmeyer, feelings of many who have recently gotten to know Coach Hilvert by saying, "He will be a great addition to the Thomas More College community!" And, when asked about the former Saints footballers, Coach Hilvert expressed his desire to make them much more involved in the program's future with exciting events such as "alumni team days" and honorary alumni captains during home games this coming fall.

C.D.P., expresses the

Rest assured, the tradition of Saints football excellence is in good hands with its new head coach. During his first few weeks at Thomas More, Coach Jim Hilvert has already made a difference by embracing the fundamental principles of the Thomas More College community, "Scholarship, Service and Integrity." If the next few months are anywhere as successful, schools throughout the region will continue to tremble when the Saints come marching in!

ALUMNI Profile

hile many college students struggle to declare a major, even switch majors a few times in the process, there are some students who feel destined for a career path. Amity Yeager fell into the latter. One of her first memories as a child was that she wanted to be a teacher when she grew up — just like her mom. While she has had many influential teachers along the way, her mom has always been her role model and inspiration.

Another influential teacher was Amity's high school mathematics teacher, Rosann Sharon. Ms. Sharon "did an amazing job of really connecting with and teaching her students, but it was her dedication and genuine concern for her students that set her apart. She always went above and beyond what was expected. She possessed a gift for teaching that comes from within and cannot be taught in any class," said Amity.

Ms. Yeager's teaching preparation began when she arrived at Thomas More College. The faculty in the Education Department made an immediate impact. "Small class size is the key to developing close, working relationships between faculty and students," states Amity. "One of the benefits of the education program at Thomas More is the opportunity to observe and work in a variety of classrooms from the very beginning of the program." Her advice to students is to "take full advantage and learn from those experiences. Be as active and enthusiastic as you can in those classrooms. You learn so many valuable strategies (what to do and sometimes what not to do) during those experiences."

After receiving her bachelor's degree in elementary education from Thomas More, Amity obtained her Master's of Education in Instructional Leadership from Northern Kentucky University (NKU), while teaching at Lincoln Elementary in Dayton, Kentucky. While in her first year at NKU, a professor recognized her strong leadership skills and encouraged her to pursue the administrative side of teaching. She was hesitant at first because she had never aspired to be a principal; however, she did have a strong interest in the area of curriculum development. Amity followed the advice of her professor and is now the assistant principal of not one, but two elementary schools in Northern Kentucky.

"I love teaching and as a principal, I continue to teach every day by guiding and advising the teachers. I have also found that I enjoy the organizational role of administration, working closely with stakeholders in the school community," said Yeager.

Amity splits her week between Highland Heights Elementary and Grant's Lick Elementary. She says that the biggest challenge of managing two schools is learning and remembering the differences in procedure and routine at each, as well as attending each school's meetings and events. "Both schools are very different, with very different student populations," notes Amity. These differences are what propel her as she encounters a variety of teaching and leadership styles. "The greatest benefit has been forming a relationship with the amazing faculty members and students at both schools."

She believes that a school administrator must possess effective leadership skills that involve all stakeholders in the decision-making process in order to give them ownership. "It is imperative that school administrators see themselves as 'instructional leaders,' which requires them to be visible in the classroom and for them to remember what it was like to be in the teacher's role." The most important thing, and what lies at the heart of all decisions Amity faces every day, is that students are her top priority, for they are "the heart of education."

While Amity may have graduated from Thomas More, she continues to stay involved with her alma mater. She is active in the Young Alumni Committee and is a member of the Thomas More Distinguished Alumnae League. She finds this involvement a unique way for her to "give back to Thomas More."

If there is one phrase that captures Amity Yeager's philosophy and attitude, it is this: "To teach a child's mind, a teacher must capture his heart. Only when a child feels right, can he think right."

Thomas More Memorabilia Committee

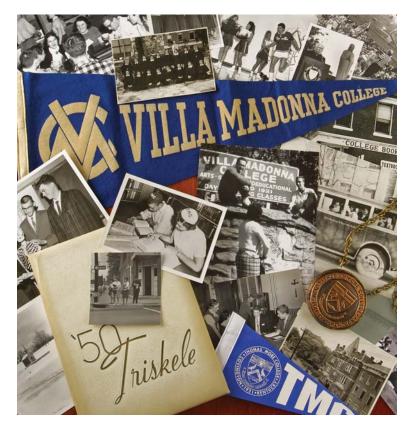

By: Donna Bloemer '91 Chair, Memorabilia Committee Thomas More is awash with history, and the new Memorabilia Committee is helping to bring that history on display. The committee hopes to unveil collected artifacts at Homecoming on September 29, 2007, then permanently display them in a location at Thomas More for all alumni to enjoy.

Committee members have already been delighted to find items ranging from a heavy brass sign reading "Villa Madonna College" that hung at the old campus to antique photographs to a rally flag from the opening of the Connor Convocation Center.

We are calling on all alumni to help increase the collection of memorabilia. We are particularly in need of items from the decades of the 1960's, 1970's, and 1980's. One committee member has graciously donated her class ring, while another has given us a cheerleading sweater and megaphone from the 1950's era. We are hoping that alumni from other decades will follow suit.

We want to be sure that every decade of alumni is represented in the display and will follow up with a list of secured items in the next edition of Moreover. You may donate items permanently, for a certain length of time, or even bequest items to us upon your death.

We are calling on all Alumni to help increase the collection of memorabilia.

If you would like to make arrangements for us to pick up an item prior to September 1, 2007 in anticipation of Homecoming, please contact Monica Ginney '93, Director of Alumni Relations, at (859) 344-3346 or monica.ginney@thomasmore.edu.
